You Talking to Me ?

- Noel Jordan -

The first thing Noel did after arriving in Sydney in 1996 from England was to join our Dowzers Society. He has held every office in the Society except vice-president and given a lot of talks on dowsing and related subjects ever since then.

His knowledge of the subject is encyclopaedic and his fund of stories delights our members as he presides over our monthly meetings.

In the middle 80's Noel read a book called 'Kinship with All Life' that started him on a fascinating journey. He began to talk to various creatures and found that they heard and responded.

In this talk Noel will explain how easy it is to make these contacts, give us examples from his own experience and encourage us to try it ourselves.

This should be a very exciting talk.

From the President

September 21st has been designated by the United Nations as the International Day of Peace, a tradition which began in 1982. A few little countries have established a Ministry for Peace as opposed to a Ministry of Defence or Ministry for War, as it used to be called.

A friend of mine showed me this logo. One day when the new political paradigm is updated it may be displayed on a flag flying over a building in Canberra, and in capital cities throughout the world.

Pivotal changes can be brought about by humanitarian action, public gatherings, meditation, prayer or just lighting a candle at noon. It isn't simply bringing our troops back from foreign parts, it can start by declaring a ceasefire with our families, friends, societies and business colleagues. (Nova magazine)

As I write this, members of the Dances of Universal Peace Society are gathered in Martin Place to join with others to sing and dance at the Sydney Peace Festival.

What the members do is to take a saying or a blessing from the sacred scriptures of the major world religions, put it to music and then dance it in a circle. Members come from countries throughout the world. The beautiful logo of this lovely society, which is flourishing in Australia, is shown on the next page.

To seek peace through violence is a nonsense.

This month marks the spring equinox, which happens on 22 September, a time when we once again have an opportunity to balance the energies in and around us. Time isn't linear.

If there's something we don't like in our past we can go back and change it. If we make an error in our dowsing we can try again, only the second time being more relaxed and not so attached to getting a YES or a NO.

But best of all, we can just go with the flow, living in the NOW, responding calmly to the hints and messages that come unbidden into our minds, at the sink, in the garden, on the bus.

They are like telegrams from another dimension, or from that part of our greater being which is multidimensional, vast in its wisdom, there to help us in crisis moments.

So we are never alone. Especially at our Dowsers Meetings and Seminars.

Best wishes

Noel

The Endless Application of Dowsing

By Raymond Grace

My friend Karen called to tell me that she had a lot of pain in her hip, and would I please see if I could help. Taking pendulum in hand and checking her out with the chart on my desk, I could see she was experiencing much pain. After using some simple dowsing techniques, she said most of the pain was gone. By the end of our short conversation, her hip was feeling better.

Easing pain with dowsing may be a technique unfamiliar to many of you. After all, the traditional image of a dowser is a man with a Y shaped stick searching for water. Dowsing is a wonderful way to find water, but that is just the beginning of its uses.

Dowsing is a method of using a pendulum or dowsing rod to obtain information that is unknown to the conscious mind. How do these inanimate objects know the answers? They don't. They are only tools moved by a higher force or our subconscious mind to provide access to information we possess already. We can tap into a vast pool of knowledge if we use our minds to their fullest capabilities. Dowsing provides an on ramp to the "information superhighway" of our subconscious.

Where does the information come from? Everything is composed of energy, and thoughts are simply another form of energy. Wherever we put our thoughts, we put our energy. Even the future is composed of thoughts not yet materialized. Dowsing focuses energy so that we can accomplish our projects.

How can you use dowsing? For centuries it was used to find water, and it still is, but we have expanded its uses. I have used it to find misplaced objects and lost children, to reduce pain, to positively affect the behavior of people, to change energy fields around people and places, and for many more things.

Dowsing is great for business. Any business that deals with the public is somewhat at risk because of the energy that clients bring with them. This is especially true for psychologists and doctors, whose patients are only there because they have problems.

Dowsing can help. For an example, let's use my friends Bill Neeley and Lynn Conley, who are chiropractors in Johnson City, Tennessee. From time to time Bill will call and say that things are not going just right or that their number of patients is off. The first thing I do is check and see if a patient has left negative energy there or if the energy force in the office is low. Then I determine the cause.

Once the cause is found, the energy can be changed with dowsing to fix the problem. This can be done from any distance, eliminating on site work. Thus far, in every case with Bill, the problems were corrected within a few days, sometimes the next day.

I also used dowsing to help a doctor in Atlanta who called to say that she simply didn't have any patients. After checking her office, it was easy to see why. The energy was so bad that no one wanted to come there. After clearing the house and raising the energy force, patients began to show up. Sometime later she called and said that business was off again. I asked, "Did you have someone there recently who was very angry and upset?"

"Yes," she replied. After I sent them on to where spooks need to go, business picked back up.

This works with businesses other than medical offices. Take my friend Danny Reynolds, for example, who owns a farm equipment business in Abingdon, Virginia. A couple of years ago, in mid May, I asked, "How's business?"

“Down,” he answered. “I’m several thousand dollars short compared to this time last year.”

I wanted to help but wondered just how much could be done. I checked the business and said, “You’re operating at about 70 percent of capacity.”

“That’s about right,” he agreed.

Sometimes I use friends to experiment and this was one of those times. I made a list of all his employees and all those associated with the business. The next step was to check each one for various types of negative energy, loyalty, honesty, motivation, etc., and make the necessary corrections.

In mid June, I asked again, “How’s business?”

“The best May we’ve ever had,” he answered cheerfully. And so it was the rest of the summer and on toward the end of the year. Then one day he told me that the cash flow was drying up. A bit of dowsing showed that it was time to clean house again. The next ten days brought in several thousand dollars.

This works with employees as well as getting customers through the doors. Sometime back, I was asked to check out some farm workers on a large farm in the south. It was a few months before I was able to meet with the owner at a conference where I was speaking. He stood up and told the audience that the behavior and attitude of the workers had changed remarkably; they weren’t the same crew. His story impressed one businessman with a national franchise so much that he hired me to clear fourteen of his stores and then hired me as a consultant.

Another way dowsing is helpful is in police work. Ross Sheets is a good friend who is Vice Sergeant of Special Operations in Bedford County, Virginia. About five years ago, he asked me to help him find a serial killer known as the I 29 stalker. He would drive up behind women on I 29 south of Charlottesville, Virginia, and flash his lights. When they pulled over, he would rape and kill them.

For some reason, I was unable to locate him but figured we could stop him. Again I used a technique that in most cases will change the behaviour of a person. I was never able to find him, but it's been five years and there have been no more incidents of that nature in the area. Of the serial killers we have worked on in this manner, not one has killed another person. Now, in all honesty, this may not work every time (probably nothing will), but it has worked so far.

As I began to write this, Officer David Simmons, a school resources officer in Asheville, North Carolina, called to report the results of some dowsing work we did last week. He and I met in a workshop I was teaching for police officers. We became friends and sat around talking after the class. He said that he, his wife and two children suffered badly from sinus problems and were frequently on medication.

He was a nice fellow and I really wanted to help him and his family. After checking into the cause of the matter (which almost always includes beliefs, thoughts and memories that we have inherited) and making the correction, I asked him to give me some feedback. Tonight he reported that none of his family had suffered any problems for the past week and were ready to throw out the sinus medicine.

Then he asked if I could check out one of the high risk boys at the school. We found that he had no self esteem, was violent to the point of being homicidal and was generally mad at the world. It was only a matter of time before he hurt or killed someone.

After clearing the boy of negative entities and changing the energy of his beliefs, thoughts and inherited memories, I asked David to give me a call as soon as he could verify any change.

Tonight David reported that he had contacted the boy's parents and there had been a great improvement in his attitude. What could be done if we could train a school resources office in every school in the country? I hope to find out.

As you can see, dowsing is used as a tool for gaining business, relieving pain and changing behavior, among other things... and yes, for finding water.

Missing Organ Energy

by Joan De New, reprinted from The Quester, September 2001

At the Hamilton and area Healing Network's meeting, Dr. Gou Yaping, a radiobiologist who works at the Princess Margaret Cancer Hospital in Toronto, spoke about nutritional immunology. He mentioned that organs which once were thought to be "useless," like the appendix, tonsils, adenoids, etc. were actually part of our immune system. A lady had her appendix removed when she was eight years old. She wondered whether lack of appendix energy might be contributing to current digestive disturbances. She dowsed, and discovered that her body did, indeed, need "appendix energy." The following day, she felt what we dowse to be the effects of her request, an experience similar to that of a liver cleanse with much diarrhea, fatigue and weakness. Since then, however, she has been feeling much better.

I recognized that my tonsils and adenoids had been removed when I was six. I dowsed and asked if I needed some 'tonsil and adenoid' energy. The answer was yes, and the pendulum swung for a short time. I have not needed it since. I am waiting to see if this added energy may keep me from snoring with my mouth closed, a problem which interrupts my husband's sleep!

Feel the Force

by TH Darlington, reprinted from Vol 1 of Dowsing Today, 1933

I have spent many anxious hours trying to make this article as simple and understandable as possible, and unless I know what experience people have had and what tools they use, it is next to impossible to make myself understood. Consequently I have kept to the bare outlines of the process; anybody who is sufficiently interested can make experiments on these lines. The reader can rest assured that what I say is not a theory of mine on paper, but the result of several years' experiments which I have proven to be correct, in my case. As my living depends on this work, it stands to reason that I could not afford to put these findings into practice unless I was absolutely certain that I would procure the best results.

Several years ago I discovered that I had the gift of telling whether a land wanted water. I found it out quite accidentally, and as I do about three or four hours watering with a hose in the summer time every day, I have found all the 'snags' which a person who does not do much watering would probably overlook. I will describe the main details for the reader to try, the after-part will look after itself, but one must be certain of the first essentials. The materials required are several pots containing plants, some wet and some dry, and an ordinary watering can half filled with water.

Prepare yourself by rubbing the hands well together in order to remove any outside interference from the last thing you were locating, then hold the plant in the left hand, looking fixedly at the plant, then grip the watering can, in the right hand, getting it nicely balanced. Start with a plant that you know wants water, pour the water slowly on the soil; after a few seconds the can will gently turn away to the right; the feeling will be the same as though you were holding a rod and it was turning over for water. Then leave that plant and try the next. If you are doing it correctly and that particular plant does not want water, you will feel the force pushing the can away. It all depends on your power of divining how great will be the 'force'. With some, it may be barely perceptible, but in any case you must persevere. It might take several days before you feel the 'force' or it may only be a few minutes. The thing to keep in one's mind is that it is possible, and is not a theory but a solid fact. I cannot explain all the 'pitfalls', the main thing is to get started.

If you find the watering can will move in your hands, you can try another proved experiment. Get a few plants that you want to pot up, sufficient soil to fill them and various small lots of different kinds of manures. For this, you must rely on the sense of touch, so it is advisable to concentrate as much as possible and be alone if possible. First handle the plants, then turn the soil over well with the hands (in the early stages you must use soil you know to be good), relax the muscles of the right hand as much as possible and place it over the first manure. If any is required the hand will stay there. Place the hand in the manure, and when you have sufficient manure in the hand, a 'force' will gently pull the hand containing the manure over to the soil.

Then try the other manures; a gentle 'force' will push you past the manures not required. There are heaps of 'snags' in this as well, as I have found to my profound disgust, but the main thing is to concentrate on strengthening this 'force', which all diviners possess in varying degrees of activity.

I would suggest everybody trying this experiment, even if not interested in horticulture, as you will find the same idea will act on human beings. If you concentrate on what you are doing and relax the muscles sufficiently to allow the 'force' to take control, you will find that foods or medicines suitable (and the required quantity) will be gently taken to the mouth. If they are bad for you, the force will take it away to the right.

Dowsing Seminar for October 24th, 2010

- Pathway to Health -

With Guy Kramhoft

In this seminar Guy will show how totally inter-related and connected the mind, body and spirit are. The body bends and twists with the reality of living, and can be regarded as a system of chemical reactions, which are influenced by foods, thoughts and actions.

Guy will present charts pointing to the limitless magnitude of the body's many ways of adaptation, and using charts explore the benefits of different foods, modalities and approaches.

We are living in a physical world in a physical body, so first we must concentrate on the physical body to understand and heal the spirit within. We can change firstly ourselves and then our environment.

Guy will use real case studies of a man and a woman to show what causes poor health and illness in layman's terms, whilst being entirely scientific. Guy will explain how we can manipulate real change to physical and mental illness by using foods to create opposite chemical reactions, which create the desired change.

He will guide you to see the connections between foods and chemical reactions. There will be in depth discussion of the acid/alkaline balance, the role of good bacteria and the purpose of the hypothalamus.

Participants will be given all the tools for pinpointing the area of the body in most need. Triage by dowsing. In this seminar the groundwork will be laid for more advanced seminars in the future.

Guy has spent over 20 years refining a system for testing our various bodies, starting with the blood, and covering nutrition, toxicity, and all of the factors which can make a difference between living a rich vibrant life, an inspiration to all, and just staggering along, dragging yourself and everyone else down with you. Guy is an original researcher and has painstakingly worked his way through a series of experiments, which will save the rest of us years of study.

This will be a hands on seminar with plenty of practical work so please remember to bring your pendulum, a pen and lunch. You can also find cafes close by on Gladesville road.

The Seminar cost is $120 for members and $140 for non-members. Non-members will have the opportunity to join the Society on the day at a discounted price.

Alternate Plan Bee

You may remember Clif Sanderson's article in the January newsletter, about Kerry F. McCurdy, the New Zealand bee keeper. Well... last weekend Glenn and I visited Clif and his wife in Auckland and they offered to take us to see Kerry McCurdy and his bees.

As you know, bee colonies all around the world are under threat, and by extension this will affect our food supply. Bee pollination is an essential step in growing fruits and vegetables. Many bee colonies around the world are performing poorly and collapsing. So far no one is really sure why.

Some of the possible threats considered are:

- Industrial mass breeding and manipulation of bees outside the normal scope of which bees can cope. Also poor quality artificially produced queens, at a time when the feral gene pool died of varroa infestations.
- The Varroa mite, related to the common head lice, is carried into the hive on the back of returning bees, infects then destroys the entire colony.
- Exposure to EMF from mobile phone towers and power lines, the radiations might disorient the bees affecting the colony's health.
- Exposure to insecticide spread on crops, or genetically modified pollens which might compromise the bee's immune system.

New Zealand is no exception, most beekeepers there are struggling to survive, by contrast Kerry's hives are thriving. He manages some 400 healthy hives spread out around Auckland, mostly in people's properties, rented or purchased for their enjoyment. Kerry visits and maintains them regularly, harvesting honey on site.

So, naturally, we asked Kerry for his big secret. He smiled and took us to his workshop where he builds his own hives.

He has come up with a simple design:

There is no landing board or bottom entry preventing access by other insects or wasps. He uses thicker timber for insulation, screen base for mites to fall out of the hive and essential oils to deter mites from staying there. The real secret, he said, is proper hive placement and orientation of each individual bee colony.

When I ask him to demonstrate his method, he takes us outside to the garden. He pulls out a simple set of L-rods, made of fencing wire, he tunes into the bees energy first, then asks some simple yes/no questions in his head following the tuning in. Each colony has its own energy field personality it seems.

He then walks around the area he wishes to place the hive, dowsing for a positive energy spot. When he reached one, his rods crossed.

He then placed the hive he was preparing for a client on that location.

The bees did not seem to be bothered at all. Once the hive was in the right spot, he retunes to the queen bee again until his rod closed, and then looks for the correct orientation of the entrance hole. To do this, he walks around the hive until he finds the place where the rods close. He then rotates the hive so the entrance hole faced that way.

City hives need protection. I am not sure protection from what, but it could be from EMF or cell towers radiation, but Kerry's guess is remote controls, YFI and cordless phones, all being clearly trackable with his 12 gauge wire dowsing rods.

When negative energy flows are located, he places a small piece of laminated paper with 16 lines, like a barcode, on the affected side of the hive. When I asked him where he found it, he said that Albino Gola (another dowser from New Zealand) had given him the design, and that it worked wonders to protect the hives.

I found that quite funny, because I had shown that pattern to Albino when I went to New Zealand for the NZ Dowsers Society's Jubilee, some years ago, I call it God's barcode, it is an offshoot of my Biogeometry training.

According to Kerry, the Varroa mites have a different preferred spot than the bees. To demonstrate the point, he tuned into the mites, like he did for the queen bee, and looked for a mite-friendly spot. He found one, on the same positive earth line, just a few feet away from the spot for the bees.

So if he had placed the hive on that mite-friendly spot, the earth energy would have favored the mites to the detriment of the bees. In the current bee-friendly location, the inverse was true, the bees were favored over the mites and the hive would be less attractive to mite infestation.

After lunch and a testing of his delicious honey, Kerry took us to the back of his truck, loaded with several hives, ready to deliver to clients. I was right next to him, taking photos. He opened the closest hive and lifted one of the frames holding the wax and honey, covered with working bees. The bees started to swarm around us, not agitated at all it seemed. I was a little bit taken by surprise, but feeling Kerry's confidence, I relaxed.

The bees were flying all around us, buzzing. Neither Kerry nor I had any protection. A bee landed on my hand, and proceeded to do a full cleanup regime: antennas, eyes, body, abdomen, legs, one by one. As a child I had been bitten/stung by a wasp, so I know how painful that can be, but here I felt relaxed, so did the bee, by the look of it.

The cleanup completed, the little bee flew away, as Kerry showed me the other bees undisturbed at work on the wax frame he was holding. I felt a connection with that little bee, it did trust me and I trusted it. I could understand Kerry's love of the bees, and the friendly relationship which binds them.

So you probably guessed that Kerry never uses covering protection, to gather his honey, which, by the way tastes fantastic. It was so heart warming to see this conscious teamwork between man and insect, benefiting both, as teamwork does. Kerry's success is obvious, his honey is great, his hives thrive.

He is a great example of practical use of dowsing. Kerry is ready to give advice and help anyone who wants to learn his skills.

Determination

In 1883, a creative engineer named John Roebling was inspired by the idea of building a spectacular bridge connecting New York with Long Island. However bridge building experts throughout the world thought that this was an impossible feat and told Roebling to forget the idea. It just could not be done. It was not practical. It had never been done before.

Roebling could not ignore his vision. He thought about it all the time and he knew deep in his heart that it could be done. He just had to share the dream with someone else. After much discussion and persuasion he managed to convince his son Washington, an up and coming engineer, that the bridge in fact could be built.

Working together for the first time, the father and son developed concepts of how it could be accomplished and how the obstacles could be overcome. With great excitement and inspiration, and the headiness of a wild challenge before them, they hired their crew and began to build their dream bridge.

The project started well, but when it was only a few months underway a tragic accident on the site took the life of John Roebling. Washington was injured and left with a certain amount of brain damage, which resulted in him not being able to walk or talk or even move.

Everyone had a negative comment to make, and felt that the project should be scrapped, since the Roeblings were the only ones who knew how the bridge could be built. In spite of his handicap, Washington was never discouraged and still had a burning desire to complete the bridge and his mind was still as sharp as ever.

He tried to inspire and pass on his enthusiasm to some of his friends, but they were too daunted by the task. As he lay on his bed in his hospital room, with the sunlight streaming through the windows, a gentle breeze blew the flimsy white curtains apart and he was able to see the sky and the tops of the trees outside for just a moment.

It seemed that there was a message for him not to give up. Suddenly an idea hit him. All he could do was move one finger and he decided to make the best use of it. By moving this, he slowly developed a code of communication with his wife. He touched his wife's arm with that finger, indicating to her that he wanted her to call the engineers again. Then he used the same method of tapping her arm to tell the engineers what to do. It seemed foolish but the project was under way again.

For 13 years Washington tapped out his instructions with his finger on his wife's arm, until the bridge was finally completed. Today the spectacular Brooklyn Bridge stands in all its glory as a tribute to the triumph of one man's indomitable spirit and his determination not to be defeated by circumstances. It is also a tribute to the engineers and their team work, and to their faith in a man who was considered mad by half the world. It stands too as a tangible monument to the love and devotion of his wife, who for 13 long years patiently decoded the messages of her husband and told the engineers what to do.

Perhaps this is one of the best examples of a never-say-die attitude that overcomes a terrible physical handicap and achieves an impossible goal.

Often when we face obstacles in our day-to-day life, our hurdles seem very small in comparison to what many others have to face. The Brooklyn Bridge shows us that dreams that seem impossible can be realised with determination and persistence, no matter what the odds are.

Even the most distant dream can be realized with determination and persistence.

The Lord's Answer

We pray to God, but we never think that God could answer us. So here is what He would have to say:

I have Loved you with an everlasting love, so I am constant in my affection for you (Jeremiah 31:3)

Dear One,

I love you, you are lovely in my eyes and I created you to be just as you are. Do not criticise yourself or get yourself down for not being perfect in your own eyes. This leads only to frustration. I want you to trust me, one step, one day at a time. Be free, be yourself. Don't allow other people to run everything. I give you love, joy, peace. Look to me for answers. I am your shepherd and I will lead you. Follow me only.

Be not concerned with yourself, you are my responsibility. I will change you without you hardly knowing it, you are to love yourself and love others simply because I love you. Take your eyes off yourself, look only at me. I lead, I change, I make, you are mine.

Let me have the joy of making you Christ-like. Let me make you what I want you to be. Let me give you joy, peace, kindness, no one else can, let me love you. Do not struggle, but relax in my love. I know what is best for you. I will supply all your needs. Look only at me. I love you.

Your Heavenly Father

The Cracked Pot

An elderly Chinese woman had two large pots, each hung on the ends of a pole which she carried across her neck.

One of the pots had a crack in it while the other pot was perfect and always delivered a full portion of water.

At the end of the long walks from the stream to the house, the cracked pot arrived only half full.

For a full two years this went on daily, with the woman bringing home only one and a half pots of water.

Of course, the perfect pot was proud of its accomplishments. But the poor cracked pot was ashamed of its own imperfection, and miserable that it could only do half of what it had been made to do.

After two years of what it perceived to be bitter failure, it spoke to the woman one day by the stream.

“I am ashamed of myself, because this crack in my side causes water to leak out all the way back to your house.”

The old woman smiled, “Did you notice that there are flowers on your side of the path, but not on the other pot's side?”

“That's because I have always known about your flaw, so I planted flower seeds on your side of the path, and every day while we walk back, you water them.”

“For two years I have been able to pick these beautiful flowers to decorate the table. Without you being just the way you are, there would not be this beauty to grace the house.”

Each of us has our own unique flaw. But it's the cracks and flaws we each have that make our lives together so very interesting and rewarding.

You've just got to take each person for what they are and look for the good in them.

SO, to all of my cracked pot friends, have a great day and remember to smell the flowers on your side of the path!

Quote of the day

*“I am still determined to be cheerful and happy, in whatever situation I may be;
for I have also learned from experience that the greater part of our happiness or misery depends upon our dispositions, and not upon our circumstances.”*

A Lawyer on the Evidence for the Afterlife

- Victor Zammit -

Victor will present various evidence he has for the existence of the afterlife. He will be putting emphasis on materialisations of medium David Thompson. Victor with others in his circle have investigated the medium virtually every week for two years.

The materialisations of David Thompson are claimed to be the best we have in the world today.

Victor says that the afterlife evidence is now objective and repeatable. During the materialisations, he converses with afterlife intelligences. He also witnessed some fifty reunions of those from the afterlife with their loved ones sitting in the sessions.

Victor will present simple steps which he says will allow you to reach the Realm of the Light on crossing over.

He wrote a book called 'A Lawyer Presents the Case for Afterlife' which he will also introduce.
